

An Ex-Secret Service Agent's Desperate Mission to Save an Iraqi Scientist

In 1995, former Secret Service agent Bob Baer was recruited by the CIA to lead a daring mission to rescue an Iraqi scientist from Saddam Hussein's regime. The scientist, Khidir Hamza, was a defector who had provided the United States with valuable intelligence about Iraq's weapons program. However, he had been captured by Iraqi forces and was being held in a secret prison.

Baer and his team of operatives knew that the mission would be extremely dangerous. They would be operating in a hostile country, and they would be facing off against some of the most ruthless and well-trained soldiers in the world. But they were also determined to save Hamza, and they were confident that they could get the job done.
