What is Justice As Fairness?

Rawls' theory of justice is based on the idea that justice is fairness. He argues that a just society is one that is fair to all its members. This means that everyone should have equal opportunities to achieve their goals and that no one should be disadvantaged simply because of their race, gender, or social class.

Rawls' theory of justice is based on two main principles:

1. The principle of equal liberty: All citizens should have equal basic liberties, such as the right to vote, the right to free speech, and the right to a fair trial.
2. The difference principle: Social and economic inequalities should only be allowed if they benefit the least advantaged members of society.

These two principles together define Rawls' theory of justice. He argues that a just society is one that satisfies both principles.
