

Justice For All Those Marginalized By Our Food System

Our food system is broken. It is a system that is designed to benefit the few at the expense of the many. It is a system that is based on exploitation and oppression. It is a system that is not sustainable for our planet or our people.

The consequences of our broken food system are devastating. Every year, millions of people die from hunger and malnutrition. Millions more suffer from preventable diseases that are caused by poor nutrition. And the environmental impacts of our food system are undeniable: it is a major contributor to climate change, water pollution, and deforestation.

The good news is that we can create a more just and equitable food system. We can create a system that is based on sustainability and respect for all people. But we need to work together to make it happen.

This book is a call to action. It is a call to action for all of us who believe that everyone deserves access to healthy, affordable food. It is a call to action for all of us who believe that we can create a better food system for all.

In this book, you will learn about the many ways that our food system marginalizes people and communities. You will learn about the history of food injustice in the United States. You will learn about the policies and practices that perpetuate food insecurity and food apartheid. And you will learn about the people and organizations who are working to create a more just and equitable food system.

This book is not just a book about problems. It is also a book about solutions. You will learn about the policies and programs that can help to create a more just and equitable food system. You will learn about the ways that you can get involved in the fight for food justice. And you will learn about the hope that is possible when we work together to create a better future.

I believe that we can create a more just and equitable food system. I believe that we can create a system that is based on sustainability and respect for all people. But we need to work together to make it happen. I hope that this book will inspire you to join the fight for food justice. I hope that it will inspire you to create a better food system for all.
